

Why you're blind to the complete picture

71% of the earth's surface is water.

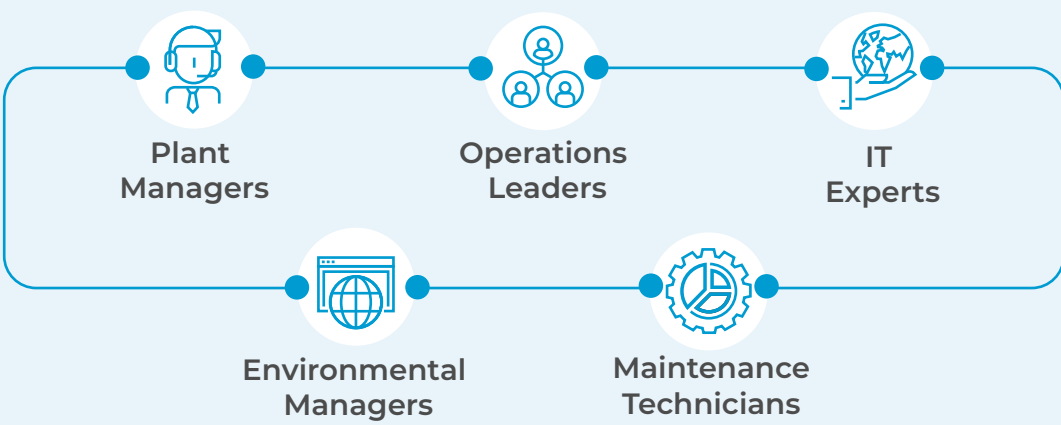

It deserves looking after. And yet, operational performance in the UK water and wastewater industry is stagnating. Why? A reliance on disparate and siloed OT and IT infrastructures has muddled data visualisation.

When you can't see the complete picture, your decision making suffers. Here we uncover the three biggest challenges at the root of the problem.

1. Collaboration is drying up

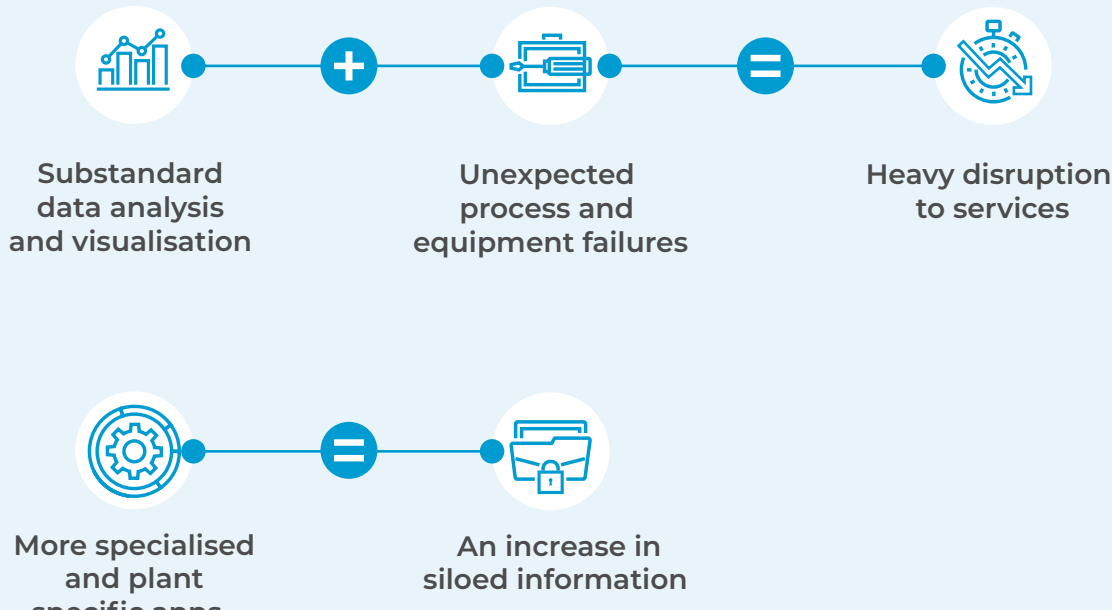

There's a host of people involved in water and wastewater organisations. You've got:

But without visibility and confidence, and with so many management stakeholders, effective collaboration becomes difficult to achieve. As a result, it's much harder to see the full picture and keep operations cost-effective.

2. There's an ocean of disparate systems and data sources

Without appropriate data management and an improvement to operational systems, it's tricky for owners to reduce downtime and optimise workflow, blurring the big picture.

3. The choppy seas of improvement investments

A chain of problems is increasing operational costs and the waste of consumables, damaging the environment and bloating labour costs.

Moreover, with an ageing workforce and increasing employee turnover, water organisations need more qualified candidates for open jobs whilst upskilling existing workers.

Get the complete picture with SolutionsPT

There's an issue that's undermining decision making in the UK water and wastewater industry: a half complete picture of operations.

SolutionsPT's Unified Operations Center helps you achieve excellence across operations and critical incident response with the complete picture.

Visualise OT and IT data in context

Eliminate manual data gathering

Unlock end to end operational visibility

Simplify with one centralised platform

Access one single version of the truth

Automate actions, alarms, and triggers

Book a call with us today and discover the power of our Unified Operations Center

Book a call

solutionspt
Industrial IT Solutions